

The Interactive Content Checklist

Ten questions to ask before you hit publish

1. Does the reader get to DO something in the first 30 seconds?
2. Is there at least one choice that changes what they see next?
3. Does every interactive element answer "what is in it for me"?
4. Can a skimmer still get the gist (SSR fallbacks, details, tables)?
5. Does every quiz and poll give feedback worth the click?
6. Is there a branch point a reader would actually care about?
7. Do your charts earn their place, or would a sentence do?
8. Does the page work with JavaScript disabled (crawlable content)?
9. Is every claim backed by a reference a reader can check?
10. Would you finish your own article? Honestly?
